研究成果の概要(和文):この研究では、19世紀から20世紀初頭にかけての江戸・東京に関するイギリス人の記述を調査した。まず、鎖国時代の日本、特に江戸についてイギリス人が何を知っていたかについて調べた。この時代には日本についてイギリスではほとんど知られていなかったとよく言われるが、日本の文化、地理、歴史についてかなりの知識があったことを明らかにした。実際、19世紀初頭にはオランダ商人に変装して日本を訪れたイギリス人も数人存在した。次に、イギリス人旅行者が1860年代以降日本について書いた旅行記を分析した。また、蒸気船ルートで横浜を訪れたイギリス人の旅行や、富士山へのイギリス人の旅行についても調査した。

研究成果の学術的意義や社会的意義
19世紀のイギリスにおける日本観が、啓蒙時代に発達した知識によって形作られている点について検討した。また、日本の開国以前において既に、日本に関する知識を中国を含む他のアジア諸国に関する知識と区別すべく、イギリス人が、如何なる精神構造を形成していたかについても探った。エドワード・サイードが定義した「東洋主義」との差異を問いつつ、馴染みのない江戸/東京の都市空間に関するイギリス人の記述を読み解いた。また、イギリス人の東京旅行が、英米の帝国主義や、蒸気船などのインフラの発展とどう関係していたかについても調査した。最後に、この時期にイギリス文化が日本文化にどのような影響を与えたかについて調査した。

研究成果の概要(英文): This research project examined British narratives of Edo/Tokyo during the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Firstly, I investigated what British people knew about Japan - and Edo in particular - during the "sakoku" period. Although it has often been asserted that British people knew little about Japan during this time, I was able to establish that a considerable amount was known about Japanese geography and history. Several British people in fact made journeys to Japan in the early nineteenth century, disguised as Dutch merchants. Next, I examined travel narratives or extending the projects into British travellers such as Lafcadio Hearn and Isabella Bird. I also conducted research projects into British travel to Yokohama on steamship routes, and on British trips to Mount Fuji. Finally, I investigated the ways in which British residents in Tokyo disseminated knowledge of British culture, focusing on university professors such as Hearn, William Empson, and Edmund Blunden.

1. 研究開始当初の背景

This research project set out to provide one of the first detailed examinations of British and American representations of Tokyo written between the Meiji Restoration and the Great Kanto Earthquake. These texts, most of which have been little studied, provide valuable eyewitness accounts of major developments in the city, including urbanization, electrification, the expansion of the city, and first foreign encounters with the city at a time of trade negotiations and diplomatic tensions. They also provide insights into the relationships formed between Westerners and Japanese, providing a test case in ideas of cross-cultural civility, hospitality, language barriers, and acculturation.

Considering the importance of Tokyo in the modern economy and globalized pop culture, the early history of its encounter with the West is not well known (in contrast to historical studies of the city from a Japanese perspective, or to recent encounters with the post-war and postmodern city, which are both much better explored in scholarship). Research on Westerners in Meiji Japan (including by Lorraine Sterry, Tomoe Kumojima, Hugh Cortazzi, and Grace E. Lavery) have generally focused on aspects such as gender, politics, or material culture, rather than specifically on Tokyo. In addition, there is still uncertainty over the extent to which postcolonial theories deriving from Edward Said's Orientalism (as developed by subsequent critics including Homi K. Bhabha, Sara Suleri, and Saree Makdisi) might be applied to Japan.

2. 研究の目的

The goals of this research were both practical and theoretical. On a practical level, this research aimed to make the range of Western writing on Tokyo better known, as a resource for future scholars of the city. Building on my previous research into British philosophical ideas of Japan during the Enlightenment, I was interested in connecting eighteenth— and nineteenth—century Japanology, asking to what extent there is a coherent tradition of knowledge of the country.

On a theoretical level, I aimed to explore intertexuality between these travel accounts (asking to what extent the routes and observations of previous travellers determine the responses of later travellers). This is a research question which is directly relevant to modern ways of describing the city on social media, where "tags" and memes can create a high level of intertextuality and a constricted focus on a small number of tourist sights. Study of the nineteenth century can thus shed light on modern tourism.

I divided this project into four sections, containing four key research questions: routes/orientation; aestheticization; modernity and ghostliness; and the status of foreigners in the city. Many of the actual research topics that I followed spanned several of these questions. For example, my research into Western ideas of Mount Fuji connected both routes (asking about the routes used to reach the mountain and help from local guides) and aestheticization (particularly the ways in which ideas of Fuji were inspired by ukiyo-e woodblock prints).

3. 研究の方法

Research into Western writing on Tokyo was undertaken using archives in Japan and online resources. Due to the coronavirus pandemic, foreign archival travel was restricted for much of the period of this funding. As a result, I took the decision to focus the first phase of my research on travellers whose accounts were published, such as Isabella Bird, Lafcadio Hearn, and Mary Crawford Fraser. Research findings were presented at conferences including the Japan Association of English Romanticism (JAER) and online conferences at the University of Ghent and King's College, London.

The research approach developed in two main directions during the period of the funding: one transnational, one chronological. It became clear that, to fully understand Western ideas of Japan, it was necessary to compare British writing on Tokyo with texts about other Asian cities. In particular, the networks created by Anglo-American imperialism, which connected different parts of the Pacific through steamship routes, logistics networks, and telegraph cables, are often better understood through a transnational theoretical approach. Secondly, my research revealed discussion of the city of Edo in British writing as early as the seventeenth century, as well as some evidence of British travellers (disguised as Dutch merchants) reaching Japan during the "Sakoku" period. As this topic was not well known, I decided to investigate this. This led me to investigate topics including the British desire to spread Protestantism in Asia (particularly Japan and China), as well as writing on Canton, which was the best known East Asian city for eighteenth-century Britons.

4. 研究成果

This research project led to two edited volumes, both published with Palgrave. The first, Pacific Gateways: Trans-Oceanic Narratives in Anglophone Literature, 1780-1914 (under contract and manuscript submitted; around 120,000 words) is a collection of essays co-edited with Tomoe Kumojima, exploring the entanglements of Anglophone literature with Pacific geographies, histories, and cultures during the long nineteenth century. The chapters focus upon the physical and imaginative "gateways" produced by Western technology, including port cities such as Yokohama, the steamship, telegraph lines, and the networks of international trade and finance. These gateways shape the development of a "transpacific consciousness" in Anglophone literature, whose modes of exchange and patterns of thought can still be seen in modern-day attitudes to the region. Writers discussed include Isabella Bird, Lafcadio Hearn (Koizumi Yakumo), Townsend Harris, and Yei Theodora Ozaki. Kaken funding was used to make the introductory chapter open access, increasing the visibility of the volume. The volume is expected to appear in late 2024.

The second volume, British Romanticism in Asia: The Reception, Translation, and Transformation of Romantic Literature in India and East Asia (2019, co-edited with Alex Watson) examines the reception of British Romanticism in India and East Asia (including Japan, China, Korea and Taiwan). Building on recent scholarship on 'Global Romanticism', this book develops a model for a more reciprocal and cross-cultural model of scholarship, in which 'Asian Romanticism' is recognised as an important part of the Romantic literary tradition. It explores the connections between canonical British Romantic authors (including Austen, Blake, Byron, Shelley, and Wordsworth) and prominent Japanese and Asian writers (including Nehru, Ōe, Sōseki, Tagore and Zhimo). Literary networks in Tokyo (including literary journals and English teaching) are extensively discussed.

I also organized a conference at Meiji University in Tokyo (with Professor Alex Watson) in January 2023 titled "English Literature and the Pacific". I also published a number of book chapters (listed below) on topics including: British Enlightenment-period knowledge of Japan and indirect material contact with the country; Protestant proselytization and attitudes towards Japan and China; 19th-century representations of Mount Fuji; Western arrival in Yokohama by steamship; Western encounters with Mount Fuji; and Western interest in the Japanese tradition of "insect song."

Although archival research in overseas libraries was restricted during the period of this award due to the coronavirus epidemic, I am continuing to expand my bibliography of Western travellers in Tokyo during this period. I am working now on an anthology of Western travel writing on Tokyo, and an accompanying digital resource.
